THE HOWLER

VOLUME NINETEEN NINETEEN TWENTY-ONE

PUBLISHED ANNUALLY BY THE EUZELIAN AND PHILOMATHESIAN LITERARY SOCIETIES OF WAKE FOREST COLLEGE

Foreword

"I

year as he shall turn these pages, we shall have succeeded.

John Ellington Wihite, B.A., D.D.

DEEF SCHOLAR, DISTINGUISHED EDUCATOR, ELOQUENT PREACHER, CHRISTIAN GENTLE-MAN, WORTHY NON OF WAKE FOREST, THIS, THE NINETEENTH EDITION OF THE HOWLER, IS DEDICATED IN TOKEN OF THE ESTEEM AND RESPECT OF THE EDITORS.

John Ellington White

A distinguished and loyal son of Wake Forest College; honored with degree of Doctor of Divinity by Baylor University and his Alma Mater; Secretary of State Missions of North Carolina; President of Sociological College of Nashville, Tennessee; for fifteen years beloved pastor of the Second Baptist Church of Atlanta, Georgia; President of the Board of Education of Georgia; President of the Clifton Educational Congress, Clifton, Massachusetts; for fifteen years Chairman of Mountain Schools of the Southern Baptist Convention; now pastor of the First Baptist Church of Anderson, the largest church in South Carolina; President of Anderson College, Anderson, South Carolina; eloquent champion of Truth and Righteousness; Christian statesman; humble servant of Jesus Christ.

Edward Everard Adams, B.A.Med.

MURPHY, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 21; Weight 165; Height 5' 9"

"Eddie" found his way past the barrier of the Blue Ridge and came to us four years ago a perfect example of the courtcons Southern mountaineer with quiet and unostentations manner and gentlemanly demeanor. His friends know him as the embodiment of generosity and hospitality, a man who lives his motto, and these traits quickly made his room a favorite resort for his classmates and created in the heart of each a profound respect for him.

Eddie's clear, vigorous and powerful mind his filligence with his work leave him unquestionably one of the best men of his class. And yet he is one of the boys and knows how to mix the proper proportion of play with his work. We see him go on to complete his course with the utmost confidence in him, knowing he will be among those who make good, and the wish of each of us who know him hest is that the grace of the mountains may be with him always.

Thomas Cheek Allen, B.A.

PHILOMATRESIAN
CHASE CITY, VIRGINIA

Age 21; Weight 165; Height 5' 10"

Behold a man in whom there is no guile, but much love! "T. C." came to us three years ago, a stranger from the Old Dominion. Although he is still proud to be called a Virginan, he has not been a stranger to Wake Forest since his first few days on the hill. His consistent work and almost constant application to it have been characteristic of his student career, and yet even these have not kept him from an occasional visit to Faraville, nor has he often been known to decline an invitation to the movies. He has won many friends who will always remember him as one of their best loved college chums. Surely there lies before him much success in the field he has chosen for his life work.

Member Honor Committee, '19-'20; President Virginia Club, '20-'21; Senior Editor Howler, '20-'21.

& Senior Class

HORACE V. AUSTIN, LL.B.

NEW LONDON, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 25; Weight 168; Height 5' 10"

"Dynamite" is a "south-paw" of no mean ability. He has done credit more than once to his Alma Mater on the athletic field. He is a gentleman in every phase of life and the whole college honors him. He is a hard worker, invariably pleasant, and spreads his geniality on every class. We are positive success will crown his efforts as an attorney.

Treasurer Law Class, '21; Licensed Attorney, '21; Member ''46'' Club; Pitching Staff, '17-'19-'20-'21; Member ''W'' Club, '20-'21.

SANFORD E. AYERS, B.A.

HWANGHIEN, CHINA

Age 21; Weight 160; Height 5' 9"

Sanford is both a zealous worker and a man of most pleasing personality. The fact that he was out of college in the army for almost two years did not, after his return prevent his resuming the tasks of student life with all the enthusass which had characterized his carlier stay here. He has taken some part in athletics and has been active in society work and the religious life of the college. His effective work has enabled him to complete part of the medical course in addition to the B.A. requirements. Always meeting his fellows with a smile and showing his readiness to lend a helping hand, Sanford is one who will be much missed from the student body. Pre-eminently one of the boys, and a man of true worth, he has won the esteem of many who are proud to number him among their friends.

Society Day Orator, '29; Member Debate Council, '29-21; Member Senate Committee, '29-22; Vice-President Wilham Edgar Marshall Medical Society, '20; Class Football Team, '16; Class and Medical Basket-ball Team, '20; Editing Secretary Student Volunteer Band, '20-21; Education Club, '21; Anniversary Marshal, '17.

FA

LYNTON YATES BALLENTINE, B.A.

CARDENAS, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 22; Weight 168, Height 5' 10"

With a smile and a kind word for every one, "'Stag" (for this is his real name) is widely known among the students, and occupies a place in the hearts of an extensive circle of friends. Upon the athletic held he has displayed ability as a football and baseball player, playing on the class team in the former and on the varsity in the latter. His favorite type of automobile is a limousine. If asked the reason for this choice, a blood-red color will invariably become evident upon his face. The crowning work of his college career is the 1921 HowLer, for the successful business management of this annual is to be accredited to him, the business manager.

accredited to film, the business manager. Society Day Marshal, 117, Class Football, 117-18; Marshal Wake Forest-Baylor Debate, 19; Varsity Bassall, 18-19–20; Student Senate, 19-20; Member "W. Club; Assistant Business Manager Howars, 19-20; Essiness, 19-20; Member "W. Club; Society Class Historian, 20-21; Member 40; Club, Sophonor year.

Graham B. Barefoot, B.A.Med.

HALLSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA Age 21; Weight 160; Height 5' 9"

"A wise physician skilled our wounds to heal is more than armies to the public weal." So Barefoot, with the idea that to head the sick is an honorable profession instilled into his mind, has chosen medicine as his life work. He is a man with a conviction and a will, who always nobly dares what he greatly thinks; but never has he permitted ambition to combat love, for he has always become a victim of Cupid's darts. He is one of the most popular members of the Senior Class, possessing the mildest manners with the greatest mind and a strong personality. A more genial and courteous fellow among the student body one will never find.

On the baseball diamond he has pitched his Meds. to victory for two years. As senior editor of the 1921 HowLeR he has done redit to the literary societies and himself. Following his convictions that the real science and the real study for man is man, he goes out stamped as a typical son of "dear old Wake Forest" to win the coveted M.D.

Secretary Medical Class, '20-'21; Historian Junior Class, '19-'20; Class Baseball, '19-'20; Class Football, '17-'18; Senior Editor HOWLER, '20-'21.

JOHN M. BLACKMAN, LL.B.

KERSHAW, SOUTH CAROLINA

Age 21; Weight 150; Height 5' 10"

Blackman, like a number of other wellbred, well-liked fellows, claims South Carolina as the State of his birth. It seems that all who come from the "Hot Bed of Seession" are especially gifted in the art of vamping the blushing maid, and this fellow is no exception to the rule.

While at Wake Forest, Blackman has taken prominent part in college activities and has shown himself to be a man of true worth. He has been especially active in the Law Department, and at the Moot Court he has been one of its chief workers.

B.A., '20; Licensed Attorney (in North Carolina), '20; Ll. B., University South Carolina, '21; Admitted to South Carolina Bar, '21.

GILL WYETH BLACKSHEAR, B.S.MED.

PANAMA CITY, FLORIDA

Age 22, Weight 175; Height 6:

In "Black" the Class of '21 has an allround good fellow. Noted for his ability on the gridiron as a star tackle, and an exponent of knowledge and learning in the Department of Medleine, "Black" has become one of the best known and best liked men on the campus. Coming to Wake Forest two years ago to complete his work toward the B.S degree in Medleine, "Black" was by no means tardy in acquiring the Wake Forest spirit, which he has practiced during his two years here, and which has made bim one of the best men in his class. A good mixer, a first-rate athlete, and a thorough student is Blackshear, and the best wishes of his classmates and fellow students will follow him through his life career.

William Edgar Marshall Medical Society, '20; Medical Baseball, '19-'20; Manager Medical Baseball Team, '19; Coach Freshman Football, '20; Special Gym, '19-'20; Varsity Football, '19-'20; 'W' Club, '20.

HECTOR C. BLACKWELL, LL.B.

LUMBERTON, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 27; Weight 145; Height 5' 10"

Nature was in a kindly mood when she shaped the clay for Blackwell, for he has a pleasant greeting for all, and a jovial disposition. Armed with these weapons he has conquered a host of friends in college, and off the campus as well.

Blackwell volunteered in 1917 and served Uncle Sam as a Second Lieutenant until June, 1919. He returned to college in January, 1920, and successfully passed the State Bar examination for law license in August, 1920. Returning to college 1920-21 he was unanimously elected president of the Law Class, and it was largely through his efforts that precedents were broken and a delightful banquet was held at the Yarborough, given by the class in honor of the sponsor. The Moot Court also has done creditable work under his direction.

In choosing law as a profession, Blackwell has undoubtedly chosen wisely, for his age, qualities and experience have well fitted him to fill a high place of trust and honor.

Enlisted in Army, '17; Bar Examination, '20; President Law Class, '20-'21.

Walter J. Bone, LL.B.

ROCKY MOUNT, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 22: Weight 145: Height 5' 10"

When Bone speaks, his fellow-students are sure to listen for they know that something is being said. There are few who exel him in scholarship, and probably none who exercise more energy and persistence. Too diligent to be termed a sport, yet he has the characteristics which cause the fair sex to "fall" even for his skadow. In him every student has a friend. With his ability as an orator we predict for him a great future in his chosen profession of law; and in due time he will reflect honor and credit upon his Alma Mater.

Society Day Orator, '20; Member Senate Committee, '20-'21; Member Declamation Committee, '20-'21; Licensed Attorney, '21, THADDEUS RAY BOWERS, JR., B.A.MED.

LITTLETON, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 25; Weight 135; Height 5' 8"

"Doe" with high erected thoughts seated in a heart of courtesy returned to college in 1919 to complete his studies for his B.A.Med. degree, after spending two years with the A. E. F. in France. He was one of the first members of his class to join the colors.

He is a polished gentleman, genial, an allround good fellow, and a splendid student. "Doc" has his gift, and since the tools go to him that can use them, he was elected assistant in the Department of Bacteriology and Physiological Chemistry, where he is unexcelled in the technique of washing test tubes and making pure cultures—"good stuff."

He has already acquired the professional air of a ductor and believes in mixing love and medicine. His new mixture—'mixtura composita' with the following inscription: "She's beautiful and therefore to be woo'd; she's a woman, therefore to be won'—although not appearing in the National Formula has been recorded among the best mixtures in our Pharmacology notes."

Secretary Medical Class, '21; Medical Class Baseball, '20-'21; Assistant Physiological Chemistry and Bacteriology, '20-'21.

James Albert Bridger, LL.B.

BLADENBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 20; Weight 175; Height 5' 10''

This youthful Apollo bears the sub-title "Gyp." He refuses to "spill the glad tidings" as to how the name originated, but we venture a guess that it arose from his well-known wandering disposition. He would wander to Meredith, Oxford, Peace, Louisburg—anywhere the "fair damozels" were to be found. It was a pure case of cherchez la femme—or several of them.

But "Gyp" has long since reformed. Not

But "Gyp" has long since retormed. Not that he has turned woman-hater—he never will do that—but for the past year he has settled down to work as few college students do. And he has more than made good.

"Gyp" expects to enter the practice of law. With his pleasing personality and his ability, success awaits him in his chosen vocation.

Class Football, '17-'18; Class Baseball, '18-'19-'20-'21; Law Baseball Team, '20-'21.

CLARENCE F. BROWN, B.A.

ANDERSON, SOUTH CAROLINA Age 20; Weight 160; Height 5' 11"

Whether he was carrying the football team on its trips, or "carrying on" with the ladder or keeping up his reputation as a good, though good-looking student, "Manager" Brown has proved himself a man to be counted on. Quiet, unassuming, he well merits his popularity. If he likes you, anything he has is yours; if he doesn't like you, all he wants is for you to let him alone. And the "chins that pass in the night" have no attraction whatever for him; and the "Three W's" are all right, he says, except that he doesn't sing.

Brown's record as a student places him with the best that the college has produced, an achievement which has given him the esteem of the faculty. He has a keen brain and a cool head, which he uses with effectiveness in public speaking, having won dis-tinction in this field while in college. This is not all, for so well has he known how to concentrate that he has found time to sunport loyally every college activity, being especially active in B. Y. P. U. and Y. M. C. A. work. Nor has he ever been too busy to aid a fellow student in any way that he could. In fact, his genial disposition, his modesty, his straight-forward character have made staunch friends for him of all with whom he has been associated. When the War came, he answered the call, dropping his work at the end of his Freshman year and resuming it in the fall of 1919, thus completing his work with us in three years. His friends may well watch with interest his career so favorably begun here.

"Sheriff" will ever remain to the Class of 221 as a synonym for stanneh and loyal friendship. None wears a more pleasant smile, none takes life easier, no one is more ready to help a friend, no one is quicker to enter a protest against an unjust act. A jollier pal ean't be found; his laugh drives away the blues. A man with few faults, his criticism of others is always friendly, bis judgment is reserved. He will make "a pal good and true" for the one he shall successfully choose to crown as his queco.

He is an excellent prototype of the student of Materia Medica—he has the placid contentment, the well-filled waist line, the surgent's toneh, 'n everything. Always diligent in his work, he has made good consistently in his college career, and though we dislike to part with so congenial a friend, we will watch his progress upward and onward with great interest. Yes, we shall hear from "Sheriff again.

GOLDSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA Age 24; Weight 148, Height 5' 612"

This little man is a fair illustration of the fact that it is not always the biggest bulk that accomplishes the biggest tasks. After serving in the army during the late War, "Mabel," as he is fondly known, came to us and asked to be allowed to study medicine and play football. But we were rather skeptical as to whether or not any man was really equal to these two most arduous tasks. His record is proof of the fact that our doubts were illfounded.

For two years he has very efficiently run Wake Forest's football squad in many a hard battle, and has gained the reputation of being one of the best quarterbacks in the State. And not only in football does he star, but in baseball also he has gained an enviable record. As an outfielder and as a "slugger," he will long be remembered by fans. "Mabel" leaves Wake Forest this year to further pursue the study of medicine; and at his leaving we can't help but express the belief that Wake Forest is just a bit better in every respect because of the fact that he has been here.

His activities with the organization from which he derived his nickname have given him foremost rank as a "ladies" man." But there is another side to his life. By four years of consistent application to his work and energetic participation in the highest things of college life, he has gained the respect of his teachers and the love of his fellow students. Jones's success in the luture, however, will by no means depend on his affability alone. There are in him the high ideals and ambitions which belong inherently to the Christian, and the persistence which puts them into effect. We predict him much success.

BURLINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 23; Weight 160; Height 5' 10"

When "Rags" arrived on the campus two years ago, few of us suspected that a new baseball star had been added to our constellation, though he had made quite a record at Elon. He was given a place on the All-star team last year, in addition to being credited with the best batting average. "Rags" has that kind of modest demenor which wins friends for its possessor. In his two years here he has acquired as much "Wake Forest spirit" as many men do in four. From what particular angle he looks at life we do not know, but he has the qualities which will grant him a passport to success.

WAKE FOREST, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 19; Weight 145; Height 5' 11"

Jimmie joined us a very reserved and modest newish. It did not take him long, however, to adjust himself to college life and be gracefully fell in line with the other members of his class. We soon found that he was one of the kindest and most generous fellows on the hill.

He is a real sport and is a great favorite among the ladies, but he is devoted to one, and one only. His one ambition is to practice medicine. His professional knowledge plus the smile he wears will surely cure all human ills.

Hughes Jennings Rhodes, LL.B. PHILOMATHESIAN

> NEW BERN, NORTH CAROLINA Age 24, Weight 145, Height 5' 11'

Rhodes came to us from the thriving metropolis of the county of Craven in 1916. And from the start he has been one of the most prominent and popular men in college.

With the advent of the War, H. J. was among the first to answer the call to the colors and served nearly two years in the Naval Hospital Corps. While in the service Rhodes decided to enter the profession of law and returned to his Alma Mater to pursue his studies along that line. The Class of '21 has recognized its gain in electing him vicepresident. His popularity has also won him recognition in the Law Class.

But a glance at Rhodes' picture is necessary to reveal that his life has not been without its romance—unto his own he has added a better part. With such powers and judgment as he has exhibited we expect life to yield to him her richest treasures.

REESE, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 28, Weight 185; Height 6' 1"

Have you ever met a fellow on the campus that everybody familiarly calls "George" If you have spent any length of time here, you have heard of him, for there is no student here who is as well known and holds as many responsible positions as he. If you know him it is easy to understand why he is always pushed to the front. During his college career he has never asked for a nomination or a vote for any office. Yet his personality is so strong-his natural ability, which is strongly supplemented by common "horse so manifest—his original and ludisense.' crous quotations so much liked by students that he is quickly and unanimously chosen. Probably no other student combines so well as he, a sound philosophy of life with the actual practice of it.

ALTAMAHAW, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 23; Weight 156; Height 6

"Simp," after spending one year at the University of North Carolina, came to Wake Forest College in '17 to continue his course in medicine. We were glad to welcome such a good fellow in our midst. In every respect he has shown himself to be a real college man. As a medical student he stands high in his class. He is a real mixer, well known in the student body, and liked by all. Although he never neglects his college work, he occasionally mingles among the members of the fair sex, and from all appearances he ranks high there also.

Simpson possesses all the requisites of a good doctor, and we bespeak for him the greatest success in his life profession.

Age 25; Weight 155; Height 5' 11"

Here we have a fellow whose eleverness and affability are not questioned in the least. Wherever you meet him he greets you with a cheerful word and a contagious smile. He has a strong personality, pleasant disposition, and is companionable. And a great asset to anyone entering upon any field of human endeavor, "Smithy," as he is called by his college fellows, is a hard and honest worker, and his perseverance and grit have brought him to his present status. As he enters upon his closen profession we wish for him abounding success, for a person of his qualities deserves it.

LINWOOD, NORTH CAROLINA Age 24, Weight 169, Height 5' 8"

"Lon" is known to his friends as one of the most dependable and generous of pals. Never ostentations, always a good listener, quiet, thoughtful—his words always earry an unusual weight with them. His frank, friendly smile and congenial disposition win friends for him easily and make him always welcome in any kind of gathering. Possessing an unusual strength of character and a clear idea as to what is right and wrong, and yet absolutely open to reason, no man is better qualified to fill the responsible position as Chairman of the Student Senate Committee,

Like every man who is a man, "Lou" discloses a weakness where the fair sex concerned. Having long ago made his debut, he came out just one to the good in his clash with Cupid. Yes, "Lou" is a one-woman man. Coming back after having taken his B.A. and M.A., his conscientious work will easily win his B.S. in Medicine. His friends

"Wade" needs no introduction to his classmates. He hails from the banks of the Yadkin River, upon whose shores were planted the sacred footsteps of the great Daniel Boone.

During the three years he has been with us he has proved to be an ideal student and a polished gentleman.

His calling is the ministry, and Wade will make a good and efficient member of his profession. In the B. Y. P. U. a more capable man could not have been found in college than was he.

Sowers leaves us to continue his preparations for the ministry at a theological seminary. With his ability as a worker, we cannot see why he should not be crowned with success.

"The reward of one duty is the power to fulfill another." This has been true of "Ken." for each duty has been so well done that he has had to seek no honors; instead, they have sought him, as the list below indicates.

Stafford is first of all a man, then a student. And so well are these two characteristics blended in him, he is easily recognized as one of the foremost men in college. He is always doing his bit, no mean part, for the welfare of the college in all its activities.

If the above description fails to acquaint you with him, we might say that he is the triend of the Freshmen, mathematically speaking. And lest we forget, "Ken" is a ladies' man. In spite of all this, we are sure that he will make good in his chosen profession, just as he has here among his fellow students.

HOLLY SPRINGS, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 24, Weight 150, Height 5' 10"

During his four years here Rex, with his kindly ways and generous disposition, has won for himself a warm spot in the hearts of all his fellow students. Nor will his success in life depend upon his geniality alone. He has many other attributes which augur a prosperous career. As a student he has applied himself persistently and effectively, winning the confidence and respect of his teachers. Rex will be remembered, however. more for his achievements as a public speaker and debater than for his studiousness, having taken an active part in this phase of college life. Knowing him as we do, we feel safe in prophesying that in his chosen profession he will overcome failure even as he has routed it at all times during his college course.

He has, in addition to his college work, done supply work. He will also be remembered as student barber and dealer in ton-

WAKE FOREST, NORTH CAROLINA

Age 35, Weight 150; Height 5' 10" It would be hard to find a man who can make himself as useful in a college community as Stroup. He is a mechanic, plumber, and business man as well as student. And whatever he is about, he does with characteristic energy and thoroughness, whether it be rejuvenating a John Henry, repairing a leaking water pipe, or preparing a history lesson for Dr. Pearson. Besides, he finds time to extend further his usefulness in doing supply work in neighboring churches. Also, Stroup is a man of family. He is fortunate in having a companion who is indeed a helpmate in the completest sense of the word. And now as he goes from us, we may safely predict a life of larger usefulness as he enters the great work of the ministry.

"Every man has three characters: that which he exhibits, that which he has, and that which he thinks he has." In "John" these three are one! And it is character that has won for him the respect of the Faculty, and the admiration of the students with whom he has been associated.

As a student he is excelled by few; as a Christian gentleman by none. He is always found aligned with the highest and best in college life. In addition to his record as a student, his devotion to B. V. P. U. work stands out preeminently.

In his going the college loses and the world gains "a man." And we predict for him a noble life and a useful career in whatever vocation he chooses.

As an exponent of the highest degree of sportsmanship, an ardent apport of student body activities, and a thorough student, "Bill" has proved himself worthy of becoming a creditable som of his Alma Mater. Having chosen medicine as his life profession, he has bent his efforts in that department. With a winning personality, a gentleman in every sense of the word, and a determination to use his ability to the best advantages, "Bill" is destined to meet with unlimited success in the realm of his professional activities. Not only his immediate classmates, but every Wake Forest man who knows him will follow his career with genuine interest and best wishes for his success.

Age 23: Weight 140: Height 6'

Paul goes out from as happily inbued with those sterling qualities of manhood that are characteristic of every winner in the biggest issues of life. Though we found him on the sandy plains of Duplin, his unusual proficiency in scholarship and many-sided ability as well as his towering physical form, utterly belie the nature of his native soil. Hard work, persistent application, and consecration to duty are his passion and recreation. In three short years West has gained his B.A. degree and at the same time has held a place near the top of his class. Alma Mater here gives to the Baptist world another polished pulpit orator and many friends will watch with much interest, and not without admiration and pride, the career of this youthful minister.

Moody is an example of modesty. Seldom to we find a man more reserved, more neat in his appearance, or more careful in his manner. He has long since been a virtim of Cupid's dart, but no matter where he is, his winning smile always attracts even the most charming of the opposite sex. But he is just as elever with his work as he is with his habits, and is always sure to rank with those who register in the "safety zone." Moody is liked by all and often is greeted with a teasing loke.

We have here "Jinks," the solitary son of Northampton. Look him straight in the eyes—but beware of his vampish smile, girls—and you will see there truth, kindness, and generosity bubbling from his congenial heart. To know him means knowing none less than one of the best of Wake's students. Although White has not entered every phase of college activity, where he has placed himself, there his heart has been also. His three years of good work on the varsity baseball team show the type of work he puts out when he goes in for a thing. Without being a hookworm, White is a good student, and his consistent effort has placed him well among the first in his studies.

Securing his license in 1920, "R. J." is looking forward to the day when he will hang out his shingle. His ability augurs for

You would recognize him as "Whitie," not only by his surname, but more readily perhaps by his hair. He is full of "pep" from head to toe, and his eyes beam with fun and geniality. These qualities make friends for him wherever he goes. You will rarely find as many unusual talents and accomplishments blended in one personality. Concrete examples of these attainments may be found in his record as winner of a speaker's medal, member of the Glee Chib, Special Gym Class and Philosophy Club, not to mention his career as Editor and contributor to The Student. He is a natural-born cartoonist, and the various intricacies of poetry or prose hold no terrors for him. A bright future awaits bim, either as a professional man or

The name "Froggy" should be given to this chap, but ordinarily he is known as "Judge." He came from the mountains of Watanga, and is an exceptional production of Western Carolina. This fact was clearly demonstrated immediately after his arrival. At the beginning of his second year he was given the place of assistant in the department of Biology, and the following year was promoted to the position of instructor. Being connected with the department of "Bings." his natural hobby and chief source of amusement is acting the part of a zoo keeper, and casting a casual glance through the ocular of a microscope between times.

"Judge's" genial disposition makes him
we'll liked by all who know him. He leaves

STATESVILLE, NORTH CAROLINA Age 22; Weight 160; Height 5' 10"

When the daughters of Zeus were musing over a small bit of elay, and wondering what should be done with it, they decided at last to make one who should be fair, comely, and handsome. In this very act, they piled the clay so as to blend together the musly, upright, and steady qualities of youth it such a way as to form a future leader of users. In this they did not fail, for his qualities in the class room are unsurpassed for a lack of 'legging' ability, for good recitations, and for exemplary deportment. At work or play, his fellow students have always met a smile and a word of cheer from him. They have all learned that honesty is a part of his soul, and that to stoop to a shady deed is not in him.

As he leaves his Alma Mater well equipped for higher work in his profession, his future companions will find him "true blue" to the very soul. An in pursuit of his God-given task, his work will be sweetened as he looks back to old Alma Mater and days gone by.

Senior Class Poem

Not the end is this at last we're now obtained, Nor do we count a cictory of life here won, Just the arms for fighting battles we have gained, And the battles to be fought have just begun.

Alma Mater, as we leave your halls so dear, And engage in many a battle we must win, May we always love the shrine that we loved And be as kind to you as you to us have been.

All the laurels we shall win belong to thee—
And our duty is to conquer all we can.
Then the world shall find our every victory
Is but the touch of greatness that you give to man.

Senior Class History

HERE probably has never been a class at Wake Forest having such a varied history as that of the Senior Class of 1921.

Early in September, 1917, there came to Wake Forest a group of Freshmen, not so large in number as the preceding and succeeding classes, but embodying every possible characteristic to be found in a like number of modern first-year college students. From almost every nook in North Carolina, as well as from many other states, these sturdy youths came, bringing with them their varied ideas and ambitions which were destined to be shattered to pieces only to be replaced by much broader and much more progressive ones. These disappointments served not as stumbling blocks to mar our progress in the worthy pursuits, but as a stimulus to spur us on to what we are and to what we hope to be.

Due to the great World War our yearly attendance has been irregular, some having had to leave our ranks never to return, while others more fortunate were absent for only a short while, during which time they were serving their country with that same ardent zeal which prompted their steps to this noble seat of learning.

The War having ended, we were only too glad to adopt a number of students who, prior to their military service, had been a part of our immediate predecessors. These husky lads have fallen in line with us and, though their experience is more extensive, in college life no distinction is to be seen.

Our class has never been one noted for its phenomenal geniuses, but one of those dependable types, which in the long grind of life's weary travel stands our as a trusty guide post by which men may be directed and expect to attain their much sought goal.

While in athletics we can not boast of any long line of victories, we may look back over the past records and see that we were always present with that fighting spirit which sooner or later must win. However, during our stay in college we furnished the backbone for the various varsity teams. Not only in athleties, but also in literary and forensic realms we have commanded an enviable position. The college and state publications have ever been conspicuous with our contributions, and the society halls during the past four years have scarcely ceased to ring with the echo of our voices.

As we come into the full glory of our much longed for Senior year, we no ago, nor do we worry about every newish being in his hole at the twilight hour as we were guilty of doing in the bloody days of our Sophomority; we no longer as Juniors, sit back in our rockers and through the dense log of smoke from our pipes, picture what we will do when we become dignified Seniors, but instead, we have turned our minds to a much broader field of thought. We have just realized we are face to face with the real problems of life. In our hearts we are very grateful to this institution for the noble inspirations and high ambitions which have characterized our four years' stay at Wake Forest.

This brings us to the end of our college history, yet it seems only a beginning to the real history of our lives. We must now lay aside the historian's pen and set sail upon the great Sea of Life to begin that greater history, which will by some unknown power be recorded indelibly upon the records of time. May our lives ever be guided by the ideal expressed in the eloquent works of our beloved president, "Whether you dice with death while the mad guns curse overhead, or in more homely ways, give yourselves wholly to the highest you see and the best you know, live or die, not for flag, clan, or class,

"But for a dream born in an artisan shed, And for the secret scriptures of the poor."

Last Will and Testament

Cosmos, Earth, Northern and Western Hemisphere, United States of America, North Carolina, County of Wake, City of Wake Forest, Wingate Memorial Hall,

To our legatees and friends, Greeting:

Wills have been made from the dawn of creation; possibly Adam and Job, but surely Abraham and Jacob, made wills. Did not Adam appoint his steward as heir, and did not Jacob give Joseph a portion above that of his brethren?

First: We desire to express our sincere thanks to our parents and friends who have made it possible for us to reach this glad hour.

Second: To the faculty we give in perpetuity our love and esteem, and an ever increasing respect in token of what they have so graciously done in moulding, shaping, and making us what we are.

Third: To our Alma Mater we give our loyalty in perpetuity, pledging ourselves always to make it a better, bigger and more glorious institution.

Fourth: We direct the Student Body, Coach White, and the Faculty to put out a winning Football Team next year.

Fifth: We give, bequeath, and devise to Director Langston the Gymnasium to have and hold in fee simple forever, with all the appurtenances thereto appertaining to his sole and separate use. It is also our will that he shall have complete control over all baths, and that he shall provide cold baths as often as his patrons so require—to the end that salubrious water shall not fail the unborn generations who come up from the desert.

Sixth: To the following members of the faculty:

- To Professor Gosnell we give one zebra-mule six years old—the same which escaped from his barn December 13, 1920, which said zebra-mule is now being held in trust for said Professor Gosnell by one Bobbitt, sometimes Lord High Sheriff of the city called Wake Forest.
- 2. To Dr. Pearson we give one box of cough drops. It is directed that "Dimples" Harris sees that this trust is carried out; and also that he provide the said Dr. Pearson with noiseless radiators.
- 3. To Professor Henderson we give the remaining golf sticks.

- 4. We give Dr. Gould a paid up copyright for the term of his natural life on the following phrase now rare and obsolete to him, "Beg pardon."
- All of us who reach Congress pledge ourselves unreservedly to Dr. Sledd to seek the adoption of the Versailles League of Nations intact.
- 6. After our decease, and after our funeral expenses have been paid, we direct that all our property, real and personal, be sold, and that the funds of the same be turned over to Dr. Paschal to be used in furtherance of athletics at Wake Forest College.
- 7. We give to Dr. Hubert M. Poteat the privilege, and lay the injunction upon him, of choosing and training the cheer leader at Wake Forest College for a period of five years.

Serenth: To the following separate and distinct classes we give an annuity so long as the College shall stand:

- 1. To the Law Class we give and bequeath one brindled bull named "Ben."
- 2. To the "Sky" Class we give each several member a copy of "Pilgrim's Progress" that he may be mindful that he too is a pilgrim, and a Clergy Permit in order to facilitate his passage to and from the College called Meredith and Oxford, and those other institutions among the Philistines wherein there be the daughters of men that are fair to look upon.
- 3. To the Medical Class we give one "Stiff" to be supplied by the State Penitentiary.
- 4. To the Teachers' Class we give each separate and several member a copy of the "Sketch Book" with a leaf turned down at the chapter entitled, "The Legend of the Sleepy Hollow."

Eighth: To the Junior, Sophomore, and Freshman Classes we direct alone that you "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called."

We do appoint our beloved Dean and President our executors.

In witness whereof, We, the Class of Twenty-one, the testators, have to this, our last Will and Testament, set our hand and seal, this the twenty-seventh day of May, Anno Domini, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-one.

Class of '21 (Seal) By the Testator (Seal)

Senior Vote

I T was a stormy night when the Class of Twenty-one met for the purpose of conferring degrees and titles upon its members. During the first part of the meeting Sophomore spirit and enthusiasm was much in evidence. But soon the cloud of smoke which rose from the 100 "Meditations" hovered over the class, quelling the riot and restored the dignity so characteristic of the Senior class.

In the midst of a profound calm, A. D. Kinnette was declared the Most Handsome Man. A quiet ripple passed over the room as Clifford Buie was given the title of Woman Hater. The Biggest Sport went without a dissenting voice to Runt Groves. Pat Gordon was declared the biggest Spendthrift by a majority of one vote. Wade Dickens was elected the Most Studious Member of the class. W. C. Byrd was chosen the Best Orator, I. K. Stafford the Best Athlete, and T. O. Moses the Biggest Liar.

These honors were accorded as follows: Lacy Butler, the Most Popular Man; Fats Bundy, the Most Dignified; Percy Barefoot, the Best Dresser; Tom Allen, the Best Politician; June Frazier, the Biggest Parasite; R. J. White, the Campus Walker, and Pat Mauney, the Biggest Loafer.

Just here the stillness became intense while Sky Eagle was elected the Biggest Drunkard; Dan Hurley, the Biggest Rough Neck, and Frank Woodward, the best Crap Shooter.

Now a sigh of relief came and the election continued as follows: Best Hash Slinger, Bob Grose; Most Religious Man, Dock Pondfield; The Most Feminine, W. C. Furr; The Ugliest Man, S. A. Duncan; The Biggest Hayseed, W. J. Bone; The Best Ladies' Man, Bill Watkins; Train Dispatcher, Red Pope; Biggest Tobacco Chewer, Geo. Thomas; The Biggest Dreamer, R. A. Herring; Movie Fiend, J. K. Outlaw, and the Biggest Grouch went without an objection to C. C. Perry.

Other honors were: The Biggest Vamp, Ed Adams; Biggest Flirt, Thad by Strongers; Biggest Bull Shooter, M. J. Rivenbark; The Most Conceited, T. O. Pangle; The Best Hobo, "Sheriff Hunt"; Biggest Profiteer, Stag Ballentine; Mascot, "Creepy" Pitman; Best Detective, "Senator" Goodson; Biggest Dope Fiend, C. F. Brown; Best Musician, H. V. Austin, and last but not least, The Biggest Feet to A. P. Parker.

Mr. Parker made the motion to adjourn, as the fire of the eigars was so near our teeth that they began to pop.

Senior Class Prophecy

E VERY CLASS has a guardian angel that follows him through all his wanderings. Sometimes he speaks through the mouth of a little child, or even through the senseless mutterings of a person whose reason is gone. The waves of the sea, as they beat upon the cold rocks, bear a message or a meaning that all the mechanical devices for communication used by modern man cannot convey.

This apparition or disembodied soul is in one form today—tomorrow, in another, but always it comes to us—now on the streets of the great eity—now on the barren wastes, the whispers of people or events that have long since gone from our minds.

Once, when nearing the temple ruins of an ancient Celestial tribe, in the Gobi Desert, an ordinary camel driver said to me:

"Sir, you shall talk with your dead brother in the temple ruins of my ancestors tonight." I laughed, for he was only an ignorant Mongolian, who had cursed and driven earnels all his life. But my brother, who had been lost at sea, did walk and talk with me that night, and I shudder, even to this day, when I think of the way in which I mocked the man whose wisdom was more than mortal.

Recently I sat in a quiet little eafe in the heart of the old Latin Quarter in Paris. As the mellow old vintage mellowed a hardened old heart, my thoughts turned back to the younger days.

"Why," I asked of an ancient stranger who sat at my table, "does our hair become gray? and why do the years move on with so swift a flight, completely obliterating the memory of the friends of our youth?"

"Ah! monsieur, you too are drinking the dregs from Old Age's cup and are longing for the faces of friends made when life was young," replied the old man, with a look of understanding coming over his face.

Just then the sound of many bells burst from every part of the city—some tolling sadly, some ringing merrily, and some that had no distinct sound but were lost in the great consonance.

"And why this ringing of bells?" I asked, somewhat puzzled.

"Mon Dien! have you lost track of everything?" inquired my companion. "Those are the bells of the cathedrals ringing in the year 1970."

"Forty-nine years ago I was a senior in college," I told him.

"And forty-nine years ago I was manager of Le Theatre de Paris," he replied. The old theatre, of which he spoke, was once the grandest show-house in Paris. I had visited it in the old days when Caruso and Galli-Curci, with a company of other artists, were giving "Faust." However, as the years rolled by, the tide of pleasure-seeking Parisians drifted to other resorts, and today the old house stands deserted in the heart of the slum section of the city.

"Monsieur," said the old man, suddenly brightening up, "let us go forth to the old theatre that was once so grand. We shall see your friends—see the manner in which they have lived."

I wanted to laugh outright, but a look came into his eyes that made me think of the Mongolian camel driver, so without further ado I followed him down through the filthy streets for several blocks and came to the dilapidated structure that had been the seene of so many brilliant stage productions. On entering, we were confronted by a scene of broken, dust-covered seats, ragged walls and a tattered old Persian curtain that had hid the stage from view.

"We will sit in the left box," said my pilot.

"But are there to be others in the audience?" I inquired, noticing that the house was empty save for ourselves.

"No one ever comes to Le Theatre de Paris any more," simply replied the old manager.

Suddenly a low sweet music filled the hall and the lights were turned on. Glancing into the orchestra pit that had been empty a moment before, I saw that it was filled with a symphony orchestra, composed of the old masters. An usher handed us a program on which was written: "Review of the Century." The orchestra, after a few bars from the "Tempest," turned to "Hejre Kati" and the great curtain was drawn aside.

In a wonderful country stood "Civilization," a great body of people, and overshading them all with its protecting branches was the "Tree of Law." "Everyman," an ordinary looking individual approached the "Tree" and attacked it with "Graft," a sharp weapon. But his efforts were of no avail, for gathered thickly around the "Tree" were Avelon Hall, Wade Dickens, Lacy Butler, T. B. Mauney, H. V. Austin and June Frazier. They protected "Law" on every side as much as possible, but once "Everyman" broke through their ranks and struck "Law" a mighty blow. The old tree tottered and would have fallen had not Bill Mann, W. R. Felts, G. A. Marsh, T. O. Pangle, and W. J. Bone rushed up and set it aright again. "Civilization" suddenly became aroused at the manner in which "Everyman" was conducting himself, and accordingly began chastising the offender. But here a stranger came upon the scene. True she was small and sad looking but her personality was almost contagious.

"Peace! peace! let all have peace," she said.

"And who are you?" cried "Civilization."

"My voice is small and I cannot talk, but here are M. L. Gordon, R. J. White, H. J. Rhodes, "Gyp" Bridger, J. R. Burgess, H. M. Jackson, W. C. Goodson and R. R. Carter. They are all learned lawyers and will speak in my behalf."

"That we will," cried the eight lawyers in chorus, "we speak in behalf of 'Mercy.' Judge not 'Everyman' too harshly."

"'Everyman' is now powerless," spoke up "Gossip." "He appeared before 'Justice,' and employed Isham Hudson, Hector Blackwell and Cliff Buie, three law sharks, to represent him, and they stripped him of 'Gold,' his most powerful weapon. Pittman and Morrison did the collecting."

The curtain fell but soon rose again, and showed "Everyman" standing face to face with "Ignorance," a very sinister looking character. From the rear of the stage rushed George Sherrill, C. F. Brown and Chris Crittenden, and following them came "Education," a fast-growing youngster.

"What have we here?" inquired "Everyman" with an amazed look.

"These men are leaders of 'Education' and they have decided to leave him in your midst," replied "Turk" Kesler, almost out of breath, for he had chased "Ignorance" clear out of sight.

"But who are these?" asked "Everyman," glancing at C. F. Gaddy, Paul Newton, J. P. Draughan, R. B. Wilson, A. R. Smith, J. L. Memory, and H. H. Duncan.

"They are the men who will remain and help 'Education' along the rough pathway," replied E. N. Phillips, a philosopher. "And also here are Harry Rabenhorst, Ace Hollowell and Larry Mallory. They are teachers of 'Physical Culture,' a first cousin of 'Education.'"

In the distance I could see great factories and many toilers working throughout the day. "Everyman" approached somewhat puzzled.

"This is 'Industry' you see," said: "Happy" Crowell, "and associated with me, as its leaders, are Harry Dorset, L. Y. Ballentine, C. P. Harris, and A. F. Cheek."

"We would like to offer you 'Convenience,' " said Crowell.

"I don't understand," replied "Everyman."

"You had better take it," spoke up "Progress," a big smiling fellow, "for where 'Convenience' is not. I. also, refuse to go."

"But I have no money," returned "Everyman."

"Let me loan you the money," said "Finance." "My agents, Messrs. K. H. Crutchfield, E. G. Murray, and W. N. Williams will be glad to negotiate with you."

The next scene showed E. E. Folk, A. R. Whitchurst, and W. M. Neal chasing "News," a very flightly creature, over the stage. It seemed to be everywhere at one time, and I soon saw that the pursuers were having a hard time catching this strange being. At last they succeeded in arresting it, and the next moment it came out, bound in large sheets of paper.

In the next act "Everyman" was engaged in a terrific struggle with a gruesome demon called "Disease." "Disease" had almost gotten the best of the conflict when J. K. Outlaw entered.

"Quick! quick!" he cried, "all you far-famed doctors must now come to the rescue."

Quick as a flash, R. G. Grose, W. B. Hunt, J. C. Eagle, R. G. Sowers, G. B. Barefoot, B. B. Pool, W. C. Furr, E. E. Adams, H. H. Simpson, W. M. Watkins, G. N. Thomas, R. B. Groves, T. R. Bowers, G. W. Blackshear, W. C. Byrd, S. A. Duncan, W. C. Jennette, H. R. Parker, A. P. Parker, M. J. Rivenbark, L. F. Ponsfield, and Moody White surrounded "Everyman" and "Disease."

By this time the two were lying on the ground in a heap. In fact they were so entwined around each other that it was hard to tell which was which. "Drive 'Disease' out of the body of 'Everyman,' " cricd Outlaw, and immediately each doctor set to work.

"I'll drive him from the throat," cried one.

"And I'll take an eye," spoke another.

"And I the lungs," "I'll cleanse the stomach," "The bones for mine," "Watch me cure his nerves," etc., etc., were the cries that went up from all sides.

"Disease" gave a sigh of resignation and said:

"Ah! I know you now. There is no use for me to resist further, for I can't hold out against a band of "Specialists."

About that time a blushing, buxon lad by the name of John Lundy Burdy lost control of himself and stuck a surgeon's knife clear through the body of "Disease," thus ending the existence of this cursed one.

When the curtain swing back for the final act, "Everyman" was seen standing in the "Desert of Existence," completely lost and knowing not which way to go. On one side "Pleasure" beckoned very lovingly to him; on another, "Doubt" stood in the doorway, half hidden by shadows, and in a low voice begged him to come and enter in. "Vice," "Chance," "Greed," "Intoxication" and a number of other figures stood at different parts of the stage and begged that "Everyman" be their companion.

"I know not which one to trust," cried out "Everyman" with much anguish.
"They all seem enchanting enough, yet in each there seems to be something amiss.
Would that I could find a true and good companion—one who would console me when "Trouble' hovers near."

Suddenly the orchestra turned to "Lead, Kindly Light," and from the rear of the great amphitheatre came seventeen torch bearers, making light the way for the multitude that followed in their wake. As they came nearer, I saw they were C. C. Perry, A. D. Kinnett, R. G. Stephens, E. N. Pope, T. C. Allen, H. N. Stroup, T. O. Moses, J. R. Nixon, F. T. Woodward, Roy C. Brown, Ralph Herring, W.V. Nix, I. K. Stafford, J. L. Jones, D. T. Hurley, J. G. Murray, E. P. West, and J. R. Everett, and behind them was a throng of humanity—some rich, some poor, some glad—all following relentlessly onward the Light that made the Way more easy for their faltering footsteps. Above the stage, with arms outstretched appealingly, was a white shrouded figure with a halo around His head. And He spake, saying:

"To 'Everyman' comes 'Sin,' and because of this I have sent torch bearers into the world, that the Way be marked by which they may follow. 'Everyman' is born in darkness, in darkness they walk, into darkness they shall go unless they turn aside and follow the Light that has no ending. It is for Me, for I am the Way and the Light."

As the great Persian curtain dropped, "Everyman" turned slowly and joined the great mass of people who were following the torch bearers out of the "Desert of Existence,"

Then the music of the orchestra suddenly hushed, the building was enshrouded with darkness and I felt for the old man who had sat by my side, but he was gone. By the nid of a single match, I made my way out of the musty, dusty old place and found the street.

Junior Class History

In many respects the Class of '22 has no parallel in the history of the college. Its initial entrance into college was under very trying circumstances and complex conditions. College life and spirit were dormant, while the campus echoed with the bugle blast, and an atmosphere of war pervaded the whole Institution. The college was transformed into a training camp. Her sons were preparing to defend principle. However, soon came the ery of victory and peace, and the military atmosphere cleared away.

The regular routine of college work was resumed with the beginning of the spring term of 1919, and the "old college spirit" once more prevailed. The Class of '22 easily won the class championship in basketball, and held class football to a tie. The varsity baseball team won the state championship which was made possible only by the stellar members of the team who were '22 men.

At the opening of the fall term of 1919, several men returned from the war and joined our class. This year the class again was victorious in athletics, winning class championship in football and basketball. It also made its contribution to successful varsity teams

This year the class is represented in all activities of college life. In all forms of athleties it furnishes its full quota. In scholarly achievements and literary ability it is in the front ranks. On the staffs of the college publications it is well represented by men who are workers, and who show by their products their distinguished ability. In the B. Y. P. U. and Y. M. C. A. many of its members are active workers. In the Literary Societies its members are prominent, holding responsible positions and doing excellent work. On all public occasions in which students have participated its representatives have demonstrated very forcibly their efficiency and ability, and it is thought that it will have a representation among the intercollegiate debaters this session.

Sophomore Class History

THE CLASS OF 1923 made its first appearance upon the Wake Forest campus on the second day of September, 1919. It was a curious and motley array of individuals that composed this group—from the blissfully ignorant sons of the soil to the old and experienced veterans of the World War. Its numbers had flocked from high schools almost as numerous as their personalities. No section of North Carolina was unrepresented. There were those from the highest peaks of the Blue Ridge to the lowest depths of the swampy cast, and from the sparkling sands of the coastland to the rocky hills of the inland borders.

From all outward appearances this class of Freshmen seemed to the upper classnen just like every other "Newish" class. There was that same predominant characteristic—greenness; there was that same attitude of goodly feeling and high aspiration; there was that same propensity to attend the picture shows and to meet the night trains; and there was that same willingness, even eagerness, to spread college gossip. But notwithstanding all these things, the Class of 1923 was distinctly different from any other that had ever entered this college; and no one realized this fact more than these humble, verdant Freshmen.

Near the end of the first month of that session, the President of the Senior Class called a meeting of the Freshmen for the purpose of electing class officers; and upon that occasion there appeared the biggest political caucus ever beheld in Wake Forest. After the usual harangues and dissensions, and after a goodly amount of oratory had been poured forth, the class settled down to business and elected the following officers: D. J. Lewis, president; R. W. Slate, vice-president; I. B. Hudson, secretary; R. K. Charles, treasurer; H. O. Deaton, historian, and E. S. Eliot, poet. Under their guidance the "Old Ship '23" weathered the perils of its first year.

In class athletics, it must be admitted, we have not made a very brilliant showing; but on the other hand, while not carrying many honors from the field, we are justly proud of our record of consistent and sportsmanlike playing.

From the beginning, we have been somewhat handicapped in our inter-class athletic contests, not from any lack of material, but from the number of men taken from our teams for the college varsities. The Class of '23 has furnished perhaps as many men to the various college teams as any other one class.

We are also well represented in every other college activity; in Sunday school work, B. Y. P. U., Y. M. C. A., and especially in the College Glee Club and Orchestra.

At the beginning of the present year the following officers were elected: P. Y. Adams, president; A. T. Hawkins, vice-president; I. C. Pait, secretary; W. F. Hester, poet. Under their capable leadership there is no fear of '23 sullying a record so nobly begun.

"I don't care -I was jes' goin' ter have it cut anyhow"

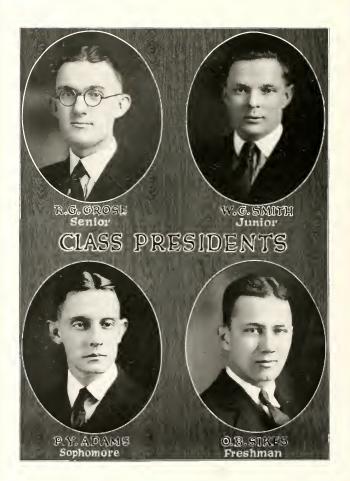

Freshman Class

A FTER numerous fake announcements had been made for a meeting of our class, "Boh" Grose called together all the members of the tribe for organization. Not more than three-fourths of the assemblage had offered their services to pilot the band, when O. B. Sikes was automatically elected president on account of his rare administrative abilities. There is no wonder, therefore, that our attainments this year are great.

In the realm of athletics our attainments have been well worthy of mention. It can be said of only one other freshman class that it won the all-class champion-ship in both football and basketball. With Martin and Prevatt, our able representatives on the varsity football squad, Abernathy with the basketball team, Stanley Johnson in the pitcher's box, and Carey Robertson boss of the Latin grammar, we believe we have a combination excelled by few freshman classes.

Our history is indeed short, but it will not always be so. It is now in the process of making. There are those among our number endowed with a liberal amount of talent, ambition, and determination, who will not only win honors among their fellow-students, but will also play a prominent part in shaping the world's destiny, whose names will stand forth through all times imperishable memorials to Wake Forest and the glory of the Class of 1924.

Law Class History

THE history of the Law School of Wake Forest College constitutes a record of lofty and glorious achievements by its sons in public and private life. Since its establishment, a quarter of a century ago, its record before the Supreme Court and the activities of the men whom it has produced have not been surpassed by any institution in the Old North State. Today it is recognized as the leading institution for the study of law in North Carolina, and among the leading schools of the South, none stand higher. Not only in the public eye does this department occupy such a lofty position, but in the college life it is represented in every phase of activity.

In the fall of 1918 the Law Class of 1921 began its college career. It was in that year that the colleges and universities throughout the land were converted into military camps, and so, while studying the law, this class were the khaki and marched upon the drill field.

With the opening of the spring term, peace had come and college life began to assume its normal aspect. Then it was that this class began to apply itself in establishing an enviable record in the history of the Law School.

The second year of its sojourn at Wake Forest was marked by still greater success and notable accomplishments on the athletic field, in forensic activities, and in literary achievements.

And now we come to the Senior year, the golden and crowning era in its existence. At a meeting, held early in the fall, II. J. Blackwell was elected president. Immediately following his election he launched a campaign of sweeping and farreaching reforms. As a result, the standard of the Moot Court has been exalted to heights before unknown. Once a week the capacity of the law room is exhausted by students from every department of the college who are desirous of hearing the heated arguments of the young legalites.

In the exercises of Society Day the Law Class was ably represented by Carter, Felis, and Bone. On Anniversary Day Butter and Pangle, with a great flow of cloquence, added new and greater laurels to the annals of the class.

Though great is the strength of these lawyers in the forensic realm, their prowess upon the athletic field must not be overlooked by the chronicler of great events.

When the football team dashed upon the field, the familiar forms of Fulton, Pierce, Holman, Armstrong, and Taylor gave proof that the lawyers were still there. From many a hard-fought battlefield these men returned heroes.

The baseball season came, and the class supplied the manager in the person of T. B. Manney and the captain and stellar pitcher in the person of Saxe Barnes.

Space forbids a full and detailed record, but the historian must pause to cast the light of history upon the quiet, unassuming, but nevertheless learned and wise counselor at law, William Mann; the skilled and crafty politician, Charles Fortune; the personification of grace and dignity, Clifford Buie; and the modest but attractive "Patrick" Gordon.

As the Class of 1921 comes to the close of its college career and stands upon the threshold of professional life and service, we bid our Alma Mater a fond farewell and go forth to add new and greater laurels to her annals of glory.

Medical Class History

N the eighth day of September, nineteen hundred and nineteen, made memorable by the organization of the Medical Class of Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-one, we the members thereof misinformed, misled, and both combined, began to make history as herein recorded.

After an excruciating course in Ostcology, we sharpened our instruments for the dissecting room where the bulk of our work for nine months was spent. In this field of exploration not a few things were brought to light. Bob Grose, an anatomical expert, much to the gratification of the A. M. A. discovered that the purported crazy Bone was not really a bone. However, in this discovery his copartner, Sky Eagle, claims the distinction of being one of the discoverers of this important fact. Runt Groves tells us that the Stork business is all a joke. If not so many discoveries, we found that time passed more quickly in Physiology and Histology. However, when our first examination was complete, each member was decidedly convinced that his hardest work was over and that he was within an arm's length of his M.D.

Our second year opened with a loss of several members, but we were fortunate in adding two new ones, namely, Satin and Pondfield. We were soon presented with the schedule of work that covered the entire day for several days in the week. It was one of our first duties to reorganize the William Edgar Marshall Medical Society. This was done with much pleasure, especially the initiation of the new members. Among the notable achievements of the society was the contribution of several books to the library which will be monumental to our class.

Although the members of our class were confined within the medical building shours a day for six days each week, the class played an important and leading part in the college life. Among the positions held by our men are the president of the Senior Class, president of the Athletic Association, chairman and senior member of the Senate Committee, chairman and senior member of the Honor Committee, and chief cheer leader. In addition, the class has been represented in debating contests and has had three letter men on the varsity football team for two years, and also letter men on baseball and basketball varsity teams.

Ministerial Class History

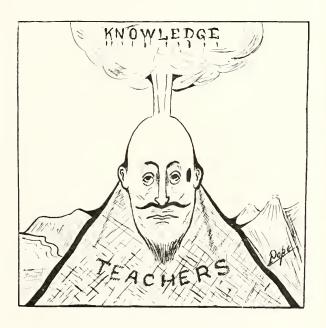

THE Ministerial Class is the largest departmental class in college, having seventy-six members. It is composed of earnest, thoughtful, consecrated young men who appreciate the needs of today and who rejoice in the privilege of giving their best. A considerable number of these men are already filling pastorates. Others of the class are leaders in Y. M. C. A., B. Y. P. U., and other college religious organizations. The energy and ability of this class are by no means limited to these activities, for its members are consistent supporters of all phases of college life. The forensic forum is its stronghold, yet a glance at the college athletics roster will show its brawn represented on every team.

One of the most unique and interesting features of this class is its regular weekly meeting. Besides the academic work which each member takes, the class as a whole assembles one afternoon each week to hear addresses or lectures by the faculty, or by visitors of note, on subjects pertaining directly to the ministry. Dr. Cullom, who returned this year to the college after an absence of two years, presides at these meetings, and needless to say, his strong Christian personality, his sage counsel, his leadership in spiritual matters have made an imprint upon the class which will not be forgotten. Also to our saintly Dr. W. B. Royall, who has given his life and talent for the past fifty-five years for the good of the college, and who is still a source of power and inspiration, the class is deeply indebted.

The class is composed of men from all corners of the State, but mainly from the western and central parts. There are no "sissies" among the lot, but they are men who, while inspired with the highest ideals, realize that their first duty is to be real men, who can meet their fellowman on a human basis and lift him up.

Those of us who leave this year, whether to go to institutions of higher learning, or into active Christian service will revere to our last days the memory of our Alma Mater. She has ever held before us the highest ideals of manhood, of culture, and of religion. She has given us a firmer grasp on the things which make life worth while, and in the future her spirit will be to us an inspiration, hurling our purpose, anent, aflame, and afar.

Education Club History

THE Education Club of Wake Forest College is in its beginning, having been organized in October, 1920. Through the splendid council and guidance of Professor H. T. Hunter, head of the Education Department, and the leadership of the president, George R. Sherrill, the club has made splendid progress.

The purpose of the club is to stimulate and promote interest in the field of education among the entire student body. Special emphasis is laid upon the situation in North Carolina relative to present needs and future prospects. The bimouthly meetings are arranged with the view of presenting the various educational problems and discussing how to remedy them. The discussions are made interesting and helpful.

Last, but not least, our sponsor, Miss Gaynelle Yates, of Raleigh, entertained us at the initial reception most splendidly. Time passed swiftly by and bedtine was called all too soon for us because Cupid was very busy, and in spite of the swiftness of "Father Time" he pierced many hearts with his fatal arrows. We all left reluctantly feeling that the Education Club had been a success both educationally and socially.

Football, 1920

WITH the heaviest schedule undertaken in many years, the Wake Forest football squad, under the tutelage of Coach Jim White, came through the 1920 season with a good record.

Opening the season with Georgia Tech at Atlanta, the eleven went up against the Golden Tornado, and although badly handicapped by lack of substitutes with which to match the fresh Tech Teams, gave their opponents a hard battle.

In the second game of the season, Wake Forest lost to Carolina at Chapel Hill by one lone touchdown, secured in the last few minutes of play.

Following the games with Washington and Lee, Davidson, and Furman, all played away from Wake Forest, came the two games with Guilford and Elon, played on the home gridiron, and both of which the Old Gold and Black team easily annexed.

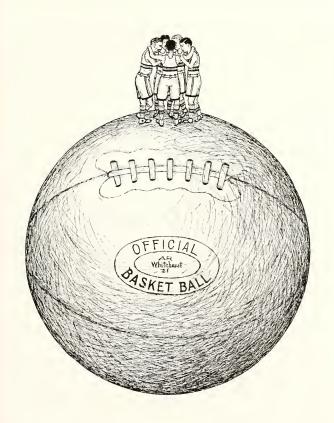

Playing the University of Richmond to a standstill for three quarters, Wake finally weakened and gave the Virginians the next game, 20 to 7.

In the final game of the season, the annual "Turkey Day" scrap with North Carolina State, the team was badly weakened by the loss of its most brilliant star, Captain Rabenhorst, who was out with injuries, and had to bow to Wake Forest's ancient rival by a score, which, though not a shutout, was rather onesided.

With two-men awarded places on the mythical All-State Eleven, Heckman at right end and Wall at right guard, and with honorable mention of Johnson, Moss, Fulton, and Jennette, the ability of the team was well recognized throughout the State. Captain Rabenhorst, three times All-State fullback, and once All-South Atlantic fullback, was badly handicapped in his last year of football by injuries.

In his first year at Wake Forest, Coach White has well established his system of football, has developed some exceptionally good men, and now has the foundations laid for a 1921 eleven that promises to be one of the best in the history of the college.

Basketball, 1921

THE basketball season of 1921, although not as successful as that of 1916, in which no game was lost in the State, may be viewed as very successful. The record of the team, which was very light and somewhat handicapped by lack of a center of height, is by no means to be looked upon with disdain as five out of the eight inter-collegiate games of the State were won. On every occasion the team played a game characterized by speed, good defense, team work, and aggressiveness.

The trips of the season consisted of week-end trips to Durham, Wilson, Greensboro, and a six-game trip through Virginia. This trip, commenced by a successful game with the Virginia Baptists at Richmond, and ended at Blacksburg, took the squad the length of the Old Dominion State. Although the itinerary included Virginia, Washington and Lee, and V. P. I., the team was never defeated by a large score.

This, the Basketball Team of 1921, under the guidance of Coach Jim White, the leadership of Captain Heckman, and the inspiration of the splendid traditions of the years past, maintained at every appearance the high reputation of the Old Gold and Black.

WAKE FOREST closed the 1920 baseball season with a record of twelve games won, and six lost, giving an average of .666 2-3. Of the six defeats sustained by the team, only five were administered by college nines, the remaining defeat came at the hands of a league team.

The most signal achievement of the season was the Easter egg hunt with N. C. State, with thirty-four hits registered against a pitcher now in the American League, the Old Gold and Black nine piled up a total of twenty-seven runs against six scored by N. C. State.

Honors were divided equally with Carolina, Trinity, and Davidson, while Elon and Guilford both fell victims to the Baptists, on two separate occasions.

While Wake Forest lost the State championship by a very small percentage, we had an unusually good season, four of our number winning a berth on the Ml-State Team.

The following men constitute the lineup: Boylan, Howell, catchers; Duncan, first base; Ellis, second base; Stringfield, shortstop; Kesler, Armstrong, third base; Johnson, Jennette, Ragsdale, outfield; Barnes, Austin, Ballentine, Griffin, Blanchard, pitchers.

Twang! Cupid's last arrow sped to the heart of its victim, and the last sponsor found her niche in "Who's Who in the Howler." The breezes mounted over the Carolina hills and the pines bent their slender bodies in reluctant submission to fate—fate that plucked the fairest flowers from their native heath, to bloom again and shed their fragrance where all the world might see. The Cruise of the Gospel Ship

By Edward Hardee

In the souls of some men is that ever-restless, ever-compelling force that is eternally calling them from the home-fires into the vast unknown.

Some have defined it as adventure—others romance. It may be one or both, or even neither at all. Those who are thus afflicted only know that it is a small voice, never andible, but always whispering throughout the night and the day.

Sometimes the voice calls from the mountain peak, and we comprehend that the fulfillment of our hopes lies in the valley just beyond. Thus we climb, But when the peak has been crossed, and we find that the valley, wherein we thought Peace was to be found, is only like valleys previously visited, we again cross over the heights, searching on for we know not what.

It was at the end of a spring day and I sat along the water-front in San Francisco, a hopeless, drifting bit of humanity. The sun was setting between those two juts of land that form the Golden Gate. In a few moments the little red, green and blue signal lights began to spring up from every corner of the vast harbor. Away out beyond the Golden Gate sounded the long, hoarse blasts of outbound steamers, signalling that the harbor pilot had been dropped and that the last connecting link with the land was severed.

The entrance to the Golden Gate was almost taded and I was in the act of leaving the seepe. Suddenly, I felt a strong, bony hand laid on my shoulder. Turning quickly, I found myself confronted by a very peculiar type of person.

From appearance I judged that he was one or all of three things—a fanatic preacher, an anti-saloon worker, or an escaped immate of an insane asylum. He was tall and thin and had big feet that were eneased in square-toed gaiters. A black Prince Albert came half-way to his knees, and atop his head, like the proverbial wart upon the elephant's back, rested a small brown derby hat. His face was lean and religiously long. Deep wrinkles ran wild over his entire countenance, and beneath heavy wool-like eyebrows were piercing gray eyes. At least one of them was piercing—the other was so badly crossed that it went into you in rather a sideways manner, and did not penetrate straight through like its neighbor. On the end of his nose, like a lonely light placed on a reef reaching far out into the sea, was a large wart which was kept ever bright and shining, due to the habitual rubbing on the part of the bony fingers.

"Sir!" said the strange man in thunderous tones, "I am a descendant of John, who clothed only with skin of lions about his loins, preached to the multitudes in the wilderness. And, like my good ancestor, I will go into the wilderness and preach to those who are vearning to hear."

"John, Jr., you interest me much," I replied. "Say more of your mission."

"In you corner of the harbor," said he, pointing out across the water, "is the sailing vessel 'Gospel Ship,' and on her decks are grouped an hundred sinless souls who are sacrificing everything that the heathen on the Isle of Hiki, in the South Pacific, may have Light and the Word of God brought to their shores. With I as its leader, this little band will sail out through the Golden Gate when comes the morn."

"But, why approach me?" I inquired, somewhat puzzled.

"Ah! that is the question. The 'Gospel Ship' lacks a steady, experienced hand to steer her safely over the waves."

Instantly that ever-restless, ever-compelling force got busy within my being. Out through the Golden Gate the waves beckoned me. Even the little ripples, playing around the wharf piles, whispered to me to go a-sailing over the billows. Strange lands, peopled by half-naked, dark-skinned folk, called out across the great sea. Hardly conscious of the fact, I followed the old man toward the "Gospel Ship."

We took a small boat and rowed across the harbor until we came abreast of a dingy, three-masted schooner resting heavily in the water. At the command of my leader a rope ladder was lowered and we gained the deck.

"I will now introduce myself," said the old man. "I am Balus, the first son of Candalus Camdeu, a faith-healing preacher. Before starting to the 1sle of Hiki, I, myself, who am a direct descendant of John, who preached in the wilderness, was a faith-healing preacher in the town of Jonesboro, Arkansas."

"This young man," he said to the group of long-faced, fanatic looking men, who gathered around, "has decided to east his lot with us that the soul-suffering and sin-tainted children on the Isle of Hiki may have Light and Understanding.

"Elijah, for such shall be your name," be continued, "you are now facing the 'Sinless Hundred." Walk ye the straight path that ye be not east into the sea."

At a word from their leader the "Sinless Hundred" knelt on the deck and engaged in earnest prayer. Having accomplished this with much zeal and perspiration on the part of those who led in the praying, the fanatics dispersed and each became a man apart unto himself.

After the excitement had blown, and I had regained my sense of reason, the fact dawned upon me that I was nothing more than a fool. Without forethought, I had consented to journey over an unknown ocean to an unknown land, and in a rotten, leaking craft, with a group of people who were little short of being dangerously insane.

With only one thought in mind—to get away from the "Gospel Ship"—I was in the act of slipping over the side of the boat and making for the land when suddenly close at hand an extremely soft and cultured voice spake, saying:

"Why leaving us so early, sir?"

Turning in astonishment, I was confronted by a young and fair maiden, who appeared more as an angel than a mortal, as she stood with the moonbeams playing on her golden hair.

Now, for fear that you may think me sentimental, I will not endeavor to describe this maiden more. I will only say that she was fair of skin, blue of eye, and possessed golden tresses that alone would have caused me to fall in love with her.

"And what is your name, fair lady? And why are you here?" I inquired with a holdness that I did not know.

"It is my father's bidding. He says that I am to sing to the heathen on the Isle of Iliki. But, I am afraid— every one on the ship seems so strange and unreal. I am afraid even of my father."

"You are the daughter of Balus Camden?" I inquired.

"Yes, Lorette is my name. And were you thinking of leaving me-I mean us-tonight?"

"Lorette," I replied, with a feeling that was not affected, "nothing has been farther from my mind this night than the thought of leaving this ship."

The next morning when the tide swept out through the Golden Gate it bore along the ''Gospel Ship,'' and on its deck, with faces to West, stood the ''Sinless Hundred,'' singing in various tones and pitches ''The Hymn of Conquest.'' In the stern of the boat, looking forward to, we knew not what, were Lorette and myself, standing hand in hand.

Once at sea, I was brought face to face with the stern realities of our plight. With the exception of myself, none aboard the "Gospel Ship" had previously ventured forth from the sight of land. Before the day was half done I knew that the operation and the safety of the ship rested in me, alone.

Soon after leaving the land a good breeze sprang up, and by sundown we were about two hundred miles out at sea. All during the night I remained at the wheel, and should I live a thousand years I would never forget that night. The sky was overeast with thin, drifting clouds. A full moon darted in and out between them like a huge ship after on an angry sea. A weird, mellow light hung over the ocean and the waves, dashing against the side of the vessel, sounded as the roar of terrific fires in a distant forest.

Just before midnight the "Sinless Hundred" gathered in the bow of the ship and began to sing. Suddenly, old Balus mounted a box and began to speak, From what I could hear, he seemed to be urging his followers to cast from their minds every thought other than that of their mission. Once he shouted in a lond voice:

"The Lord of Hosts has commanded that the seas and the winds obey the will of the 'Sinless Hundred'."

Following the old man's talk the whole crowd knelt in prayer. Old Balus stood in their midst and spoke in the "unknown tongne." Gradually the Spirit got hold of the other members and they, likewise, began praying. Finally, they all were chanting in their strange tongue and swaying their bodies as they spoke.

"They are working themselves into a frenzy, and 1 fear that it spells evil," said Lorette, who had come beside me unnoticed. By the faint light 1 saw that a look of horror overspread her face and she was trembling as though in a winter blast.

"Once, in Jonesboro, I saw them have a meeting like this," she continued. "It started quietly enough, but soon they began praying in the 'unknown tongue' and the entire crowd went wild. Before daylight they burned the church because it was built by a carpenter who was not a believer in faith healing."

True to Lorette's predictions, the faith healers soon worked themselves into a frenzy. They prayed in the "unknown tongue." sang wordless songs and gave the "sanetified laugh," which resembles that of the loon very closely.

Just before dawn Balus Camden approached the pilot-house with an axe in his hands. He appeared wild and distracted and moved as a man walking during a horrible dream. His straight eye seemed to be on the point of popping from its socket, while the one which was crossed was drawn back under the lid until it was hardly visible.

"The Lord of Hosts has commanded that the seas and the winds obey the will of the 'Sinless Hundred'," he cried. "We, the chosen of the Lord, no longer rely on the man-made devices nor the skill of a soulless creature to pilot us over the sea."

Then, before I realized what was happening, he destroyed the steering-wheel with a single blow from the axe.

"You're a damn fool," I cried, "and the quicker that you and the other ninety-nine of your kind are in hell the better it will be for the naked natives of Hiki, your daughter, Lorette, and the entire world, including myself.

"Hear! hear! Brethren, hear the blasphemy of this imp of Satan," old Balus cried. "What is your pleasure, sinless ones? What shall we do with him who defiles our temple and mocks at our laws?"

"Crucify him! crucify him!" came the voices of the fanatics, who had quickly gathered around.

"Then crucify him we shall," said Balus, advancing toward me.

"Stand back! stand back!" I cried, steadying myself.

"The first man who touches me shall die."

A man much younger than the rest rushed me and I drove a cutlass through his chest.

In a moment they were all upon me. After a brief struggle, they threw me to the deck and I was helpless.

"It is a poor weapon that doth not its duty," solemnly said Balus Camden. as he slowly raised the axe above my head.

Before the blow descended, I heard Lorette earnestly pleading for my life. When I regained consciousness, a day later, I was securely tied to the mainmast with my feet resting on the deck, and some one was washing my face with a damp cloth. When I could open my eyes, I saw that it was Lorette. Her left hand was bound with a blood-soaked cloth and her face was drawn with pain.

"I do not think that you are seriously injured," she said. "The skull does not seem to be fractured.;

"But, why is your hand wrapped in bloody bandages!" I ask.

"Oh, it is nothing," she replied, and began to weep.

"You must tell me," I insisted. "How did it happen?"
"I did it for you. When father raised the axe to strike I dashed forward, and, as the blow descended. I threw my arm over your face,

"And thus I am alive today with a sound skull," I said more to myself than to her. "But where is your father and his followers?"

"They are in the cabin at prayer," Lorette replied. "Already, they have cut the sails from the masts, and now father has ordered that they throw the water-kegs overboard. There, he is coming now. He must not see me with you."

With precise step and staring eyes, old Balus came out of the cabin and made his way down the deck. Pointing a bony finger at me, he said:

"Now, I will show the power of the Lord of Hosts. Already, we have cut the sails from the masts and at my bidding the tide is carrying the ship to the Isle of Iliki. In proof of the fact that the chosen of the Lord are not dependent upon material things, that life may be maintained in the body. I have ordered that our food and water supply be east into the sea when sets this day's sun.'

"But, Mr. Camden, you are dreaming," I remonstrated.

"Nay, it is the will of the Lord," he replied. "The sinless shall survive while you die as miserable as you have lived.

That night Lorette came to me with a cup of water and a piece of bread, and told how she had managed to hide away a keg of water and a few loaves of bread before the main supply was thrown overboard.

"You must not bring it all to me. Reserve an equal portion for yourself," I warned her, for well did I know her unselfishness.

Every night for the following week this beautiful girl brought me food and drink, and remained long enough to tell of the happenings of the day.

As for the "Sinless Hundred"—I saw them on deck frequently. It was very evident that their fast and the lack of water were affecting them seriously. Their lips were swollen and blue, their eyes sunken and as they walked their tongues hung from their mouths.

On the fifth night after the supplies were cast into the sea Lorette came and whispered that the followers had rebelled against her father and were trying to get down into the hold of the ship. However, Balus had beaten them to the hatch, and after fastening it down, was now standing guard over it with an axe.

At the end of the seventh day the people on the ship were dying like rats, and at sun-down on the eighth they were all dead, with the exception of old Balus and Lorette. The old man was a raving maniac, though too weak to be dangerous.

That night he died, and Lorette failed to come with the bread and water.

It was truly a "ship of the dead" that drifted through the peaceful waters for the next three days. After the bodies of the "Sinless Hundred" became decomposed there hung over the ship a stench that was more than repugnant it was unbearable.

Some of the men fell and died on the deck, and here they lay throughout sweltering days and ghostly nights. When the boat rolled with the waves they moved over the deck like living men in troubled sleep. Once I awake to find the form of an old man lying at my feet. He stared at me with sightless, ghastly eyes; his countenance was contracted in a horrible grin, and the lonely moon, shining through the fast moving clouds, caused his face to appear chalky white. After an endless period, it seemed, the movement of the ship rolled him to the further side of the deck.

The following night I was unconscious most of the time. In my delirium I called for Lorette throughout the lonely hours, but only the sighing of the wind in the rigging answered and the ghastly corpses about the deck looked on, apparently in mute amazement.

When I came out of my delirium next morning I could hardly believe my eyes. Lying just off the starboard side was a large passenger steamer, and pulling toward me in a small boat were a number of men.

"We sighted you before daylight," said one of the liner's junior officers, as he crawled over the bulwark, "and have been standing fast by to see what your—"

At that moment he spied me tied to the mast, and the corpses strewn over the deck,

"What kind of a boat is this?" he finally managed to stammer, "and what the hell has happened?"

The sailors from the liner cut me loose, and while I lay on a pile of rope they collected the bodies of the "Sinless Hundred," wrapped them in sail-cloth and silently slid the motionless forms into the water. Old Balus was the last one buried, and after the waves had opened up and received him into the depths, I felt as though a great shadow had passed from over my body forever.

Suddenly, two men, who had gone into the hold of the ship, appeared on deck carrying a large box, and behind them came two more bearing one still larger.

"The hold is filled with these," said the officer who had just come up from below.

On the side of the smaller box, and in the hand-writing of Balus Camden, were marked these words: "In order that the heathen of Hiki may read and find Peace.

We opened the crate and found that it contained fifty Bibles—all written in the pure English of the King—to be distributed among the grunting, signspeaking savages of a South Sea island.

"He was a-meaning fur them to have th' Gospel a-plenty," spoke up a bearded sailor. "I counted a hundred of them boxes and did not git the half of what's in the hold.'

"And there's jest as many of these here," said another seaman, pointing to the larger box, which was labeled "Holy Water."

Already the officer had removed the lid from the box. On a piece of paper inside the box was written: "That the children of Hiki may drink and be born again of the Spirit."

"Yellowstone Park Spring Water," read the officer from the label on one of the bottles. "Why, man," he continued, "there is enough pure water in the hold of this ship to fill the canals in Hong-Kong!"

"But, where is Lorette?" I cried, aghast. In my dazed condition I had completely forgotten the little golden-haired girl, who was responsible for my present existence.

Presently, four large scamen came around the corner of the cabin and in their arms they carried a limp form.

"We found her a-kneeling by her bunk, like she was praying," said the big fellow, who carried her head,

As I looked at the little face, once so beautiful and shapely, but now shrunken almost beyond recognition, the realization came to me, like a stab from a knife, that this girl had died that I might live; that she had denied herself food and drink, hidden away by her own hands, in order that I might have both in abundance.

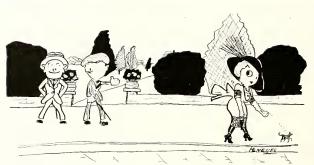

There was nothing left aboard the ship in which to wrap her for burial, so the sailors merely tied great weights to her body, lifted the stiffened form over the bulwark and lowered it into the water,

The sea, as it seemed to me, stood still, lifted her up for a second, then opened and received her unto itself. And just before the waves closed over the body of Lorette forever, I vow that she smiled at me.

We, who are ever-restless, hear the small voice calling from the mountain peak and comprehend that the fulfillment of our hopes lies in the valley just beyond. Thus we climb. But when the peak has been crossed and we find that the valley, wherein we thought was Peace, is only like valleys previously visited. we again cross over the heights, searching on for we know not what,

Perchance, we find an idol that is pure gold, and we fall down at its feet to worship. Lo! as we kneel, the elements descend and strike down that which we hold dear before our eyes. In our anguish we drift further, searching on for the fulfillment of Uope and the finding of the lasting Peace. But, for us, who are restless, these are the unobtainable, and we wander still,

I call her the silent belle.

Why?

Because, I kissed her and she never told.
